OK for WH talkers? Secretary Zinke submitted his 45-day interim report to the White House over the weekend which included some recommendations for Bears Ears National Monument. A final plan is expected at the end of the 120-day monument review as directed in the Executive Order. Secretary Zinke recommended the land maintain under USFS and BLM control but the actual footprint of the monument be (b) (5) to protect the areas of the most cultural and prehistoric significance. Zinke recommended that Congress act to establish National Recreation Areas, National Conservation Areas, and better define the Wilderness Study Areas. Secretary Zinke recommended Congress act to ensure Tribes have an official co-management role in the monument in order to best preserve cultural resources and artifacts. Public input and transparency are incredibly important to the President and the Secretary which is why the full report has been made public and why the public comment period for Bears Ears National Monument has been extended to July 10th. The Secretary's decisions were not made in the Washington, D.C., bubble. He traveled extensively throughout Utah, met with countless local stakeholders, and read public comments before formulating his recommendations. Sent from my iPad
